I'm a student. Tell me more about participating in the NACCC.

How do I participate in the NACCC?
It's easy. As an undergraduate student at a campus that has decided to participate in the NACCC, you will be receiving an email invitation from your campus leadership to complete the survey. You simply need to click the link in the email to take the survey.

How long is the survey?
The NACCC survey takes between 10 and 15 minutes of your time. It can be taken on any computer or mobile device.

What kinds of questions are asked in the survey?
The NACCC survey has been tested with thousands of undergraduate students and asks you to reflect on the way you identify as an individual, whether you feel you and other students matter on your campus, questions related specifically to race relations on campus, and how you feel your campus approaches issues related to race on campus. The focus of the survey is on your individual experiences!

I am not sure about providing my true thoughts about race on campus in the survey. Who sees my answers?
The information you provide in the NACCC survey will be kept confidential and your individual data will only be accessible to NACCC survey administrators who are under strict confidentiality requirements. For the sake of improving their campus climate, we want students to express their true feelings about race on their campus. Your honesty is tremendously important in the overall results to helping your campus administrators understand the actual experiences of all students on campus so that positive experiences can be repeated and any negative experiences can be improved.

Why should I take my time to complete yet another survey?
Your voice matters! By completing this survey, you are an active participant in describing your campus environment. As a student, you know your campus better than anyone. Without your input, important aspects of campus life may not be well understood. But with your answers, college and university leaders will receive valuable information that they can use to better understand the racial climate on your campus and the experiences of all students.

Will I get paid or receive a gift card or other prize to take the NACCC survey?
As a student who participates in the NACCC survey, your college or university may decide to offer you something to complete the NACCC. Another major reason to participate is to help make change on your campus. Your voice and experiences are unique and the results of the survey will be more complete with your participation.

Does anyone really care what I have to say?
The steps your campus leadership has taken to administer the NACCC on campus means they are interested in what you have to say. Your voice cannot be heard about the racial climate on campus unless you take the survey.

I'm a graduate student. Can I participate in the NACCC?
Not at this time. NACCC staff spent time crafting questions specifically for and testing them with undergraduate students. We would like the survey to speak to where you are as a student. We hope to create a survey specifically for graduate students and their campus racial climate experiences in the future.
