The National Assessment of Collegiate Campus Climates benefits from the expertise of a 40-member advisory board comprised of college and university presidents, other senior higher education leaders, survey methodologists, researchers who study race and campus climates, national higher education association executives, institutional researchers, and most importantly, undergraduates who are presently enrolled at colleges and universities that span a range of geographic regions and institution types. These advisory board members offer powerful insights on content, instrumentation and measurement, and ways to make the NACCC most useful to institutions and the students they serve.
